Congressman Brad Miller (NC-13) Speaks About Health Care

(Morrisville, NC) – Congressman Brad Miller (NC-13) addressed the Triangle Association of Health Underwriters’ luncheon at the Brier Creek Country Club today sharing his views about the state of the nation’s of health care.

“There is a health care crisis in this country” said Congressman Miller using the 46 million of uninsured Americans as a reference. “We need to work together to find a solution”. Congressman Miller acknowledged that the audience probably knew more about the specific issues affecting health care and that his remarks are from a personal point of view from talking with his constituents. “American businesses are having a hard time competing in the global market because of rising healthcare costs” said Congressman Miller before opening the floor for questions and comments. While the audience and the Congressman did not always agree, many good ideas were shared by both. Congressman Miller concluded by saying “I don’t know what the future of health care will be in this country; all I know is that it will be quite different than it is today”.

Brad Miller is North Carolina's first representative to its thirteenth and newest Congressional District -- a district that stretches from the state's capitol, Raleigh, along the Virginia border counties to Greensboro in the state's piedmont region.

Sworn in January of 2003, Rep. Miller serves on the Committees on Financial Services, Science, and Small Business. Noting that North Carolina's economy is in a tough transition, Miller sought committee assignments that would help shape the emerging financial services, research and technology industries in the thirteenth district and would help support the backbone of the state's economy: small business.
